Occar Brandt was charged with libelling Bo bert Frager Smith. Mr. Phillippo, instructed by Mr. Webber, appeared for the prosecution the defendant was not represented by counsel The boats got away at 1.14 with a nice N. but was assisted in his defence by Mr. Dennys

The alleged libel was contained in a letter written by the defendant to the complainant on the 9th October. On the previous evening the plaintiff had published in his paper, the Hongkong Telegraph, an article on the case of Brandt and Grimble in which he accused the defendant of being in the share market what a welsher was on the racecourse and with having bought shares on time for which he had no intention of paying unless the market went up. Therenpon the defendant wrote to him an engry letter demanding an apology, stating that he had deliberately lied, and styling him a wholesale reviler, malicious slandorer, and a coward. This letter was opened by the complainant's wife in his absence and a copy was shown by the defendant to several persons. The defendant pleaded not guilty, also justification, and that the statements were true substance and fact.

Mr. Phillippo, in opening the case, said the complainant was Mr. Robert Fraser Smith, the editor and publisher of the Hongkong Telegraph a daily paper in this colony. The witness admitted the letter, and in reply to further questions said defendant had the usual friendly intercourse with him when he came down from Foothow that time, but there was a little barrier between them. RATIFICATION OF THE "CHEFOO TELEGRAPH CONVENTION" THE TSUNG-LI YAMEN'S ANSWER TO COL. The Shanghai Mercury says :- We are at las in a position to speak anthoritatively on the above much discussed subject. The Toung-li Yamon has officially informed Col: Denby, the U.S. Minis ter at Peking that the arrangement entered into between Skeng Taotai on behalf of the Chinese Telegraph Administration, and Mesers. Judd and Henningson for the Eastern Extension and Great Northern Telegraph Companies respec-tively, has been ratified by the Yamen. They have also informed Col Denby that the in formation upon which his remonstrance was based was errogen; and they add a nest post script to the communication to the effect that it was customery that proprietors, and not con-sumers, should fix tariffs. So much for the Yamen's message. The much abased instru ment has at last been ratified and Mr. Judd by this time well on his way to England, with a copy of the ratified agreement in his pocket Sov to be delivered at head quarters in London, Now, as to the nature of the agreement itself. We are glad to be able to dispel some erroneous impressions, widely believed, regarding its object and scope. First of all, we think there has been a slight mistake in the title by which the agree ment between the companies was generall known, for it was dignifying it a little too much to call it a "Convention," inasmuch as it is mere arrangement between three public busines companies to strengthen and consolidate their position in this part of the world, and was not negotiated by diplomate on behalf of the three nations, but by business men acting in the ir terests of the companies they represented. this respect it could hardly be any more entitled to the term "Convention" than could the agreement between the local steamship companies for the maintenance of shipping rates and for the purpose of protecting themselves against com petition from outsiders, who might be inclined to exploit the local waters with fresh steamers We have not yet seen a copy of the agree ment which has just been endorsed by th Chinese Government, and which we, in the interests of foreign residents in China, and of people at home who have con-mercial relations with this country, have all slong consistently opposed. We hope, however, in a short time t lay before our readers the text of the famous agreement, which there can be now no object tion to publishing as it is un fait occompli.
But we are agreeably surprised to learn, as we do upon an entirely reliable authority, that one of the immediate results of the ratification of the agreement will be the lowering of the rate of telegraphing from all parts of China to Europ to a uniform figure of $2 per word. This, o course, will make no change in the rate from Hongkong, Amoy, Foochow, or Shanghai, at esc. of which places the rate is at present $2 a word But at all the other ports and inland stations the reduction will make a very material difference in the cost of telegraphing. At present the rate from Peking is $2.40 a word; Chefoo and Tientain is $2.80; from Hankow, $2.28; Ichang, $2.32; Pakhoi, $2.48; Swatow, $2.34; but the rate from each of these places will be reduced to $2 a word, which will make a material memorial from the Peking Gasette of the 26th The Viceroy at Canton requests that a rule may be established permitting exceptional, and not merely ordinary rewards, to be conferred on officers who distinguish themselves by capturing or killing robbers and pirates in the them to be sold by Grimble and Canton province. It is claimed by the Board of mmenced an action for the balance. That War that this favour ought only to be granted for action was tried and the question between the parties appeared to be confined to whether any such limitation, so far as the Canton prothe rate should be taken on the settling day or a vince is concerned, is considered by the Viceroy few days afterwards, this depending on what the understanding of the parties had been. His Lordship's over opinion ortainly was, that the in dealing with pirates arises from their estaarticle which an eared in complainent's paper did contain a direct personal attack on the character of branch and that the case of Branch where they are formed into associations under regular chiefs. They collect blackmail in fication or excuse for that attack. Proceedant and at times carry off wealthy persons, ing to read the article, his lordship said that from whom they extract immense sums of course a time contract was always more as reasons. Thus they have funds, with which or less a gambling contract, and he would not they bribe the police, provide themselves with or less a gambling centract, and he would not advise the jary to attach too much importance to that expression. The sting of the article was the allegation that when Brandt bought the shares he had not the reme est chance of taking them up unless the price rose. A man who did they cannot be prevented from obtaining arms, then would be fairly comparable to a welsher; but Grimble had $3,000 in hand, and he would ask them whether they thought, from the facts proved in the case of Brandt v. Grimble, that Brandt had no chance of taking the shares up. Now, as to the letter, they must consider who there the article to which it referred was an killed or wounded. By constant employment of Uscometer with the street of the facts of the coast are the constant score of the case of Brandt v. Grimble, that they are not afraid to angage in action with the Imperial forces. Even when the latter are victorious many officers and men are sure to be used to a they bridge the shares up. Then indeed they did unite in sworm Mr. Phillippo-As the plea of justification bands, but now almost all the pirates in Hongkong and Macao are members of the Triad So-His Lorship said the costs were dealt with by ciety, and are formed into companies, the names of the Ordinance, but he thought the presecution several of which, together with their leaders, are were entitled to recover costs on the plea of here mentioned by the memorialist. Twenty-five years ago the Canton Government obtained the Mr. Brandt said he thought he was entitled Emperor's sanction for exceptional measures; His Lordship Yes, I think you are entitled now, on account of the impunity which criminals secure at Hongkong and Macso by bribing the police and by obtaining the services of lawyers, to whom they pay heavy fees. Returning to the subject of the officers employed against these pirates, the memorialist asserts that, as every one in the world knows, the fights which take place are nothing less than regular battles. Unless they be out-numbered, the pirates fight with desperate courage, and there is a storm of bullete and cannon balls flying about. On this account and for various other reasons which he details at length, the Vicercy hopes

CHAPTER XXX. THE GOSPEL OF LOYE. No Althing was held in Icoland in that year of the great emption of Skapter. The dreadful visitation lasted six long months, from the end of June to the beginning of January of the year following During that time the people of the South and South-east, who had been made homeloss and penniless, were constantly trooping into Roykjavik in tens of hundreds. The popul lation of the capital rese from less than two thousand to more than twenty thousand where so many were housed no man ever knew, and how they lived none can say. Every hot, every hovel, every ho'e was full of human beings. Men, women, and children crawled like vermin, in every quarter. For fond, they had what fish came out of the sea, and when the frost covered the flo d a foot deep with ice, they starved on fish-bones and moss and sea-weed.

By this time a cry for help had gone up throughout Europe, and Denmark and England had sent each a shiplend of provisions, corn and meal and potutoes The relief came late, the ships were caught in the ice, and held bound a long month off Roykianess, and when at length the food for which the people famished was brought into Reykjavik harbour, the potatoes were like alabs of leather and the corn and few that remembered Michael Sunlocks. Jorgen Jorgensen might have had his will of him then, and scarce anybody the wiser. That he contempt; fear of Copenhagen, contempt of the her husband," said the priest. man who had lost his influence over the people of Iceland. He was wrong on both counts. Co penhagen cared nothing for the life of Michael Sunlocks, and laughed at the revolution whereof he had been the head and centre. But when the people of Iceland recovered from the deadly visi tation, their hearts turned back to the man who had suffered for their sakes.

Then it appeared that through these wear months Michael Sunlooks had been lying in the little house of detention at Reykjavik, with no man save one man, and that was old Adam Fairbrother, to raise a voice on his behalf, and no ment and declined to share it. woman save one woman, and that, was Greeba, to cling to him in his extremity. Neither of these had been allowed to come near to him, but both had been with him always. Again and again old; Adam had forced his way to the Governor, and protested that Michael Sunlocks was not being treated as a prisoner, but as a condemned crimimal and galley slave; and again and again Greeba had come and gone between her lodgings at the house of the Bishop and her heart's home at the prison, with food and drink for him who lay in darkness and solitude. Little he knew to whom he was thus beholden, for she took pains to keep her secret, but all Reykjavik saw what she was doing. And the heart of Reykjavik was touched when she brought her child from Krisnvik. thinking no shame of her altered state, content to exist in simple poverty where she had once lived in wealth, if so be that she might but touch the walls that contained her husband. Seeing how the sympathy was going, Jorgen Jorgensen set himself to consider what step to take, and finally doneluded to remove Michael Suplocks as far as possible from the place where bis power was still great, and his temptation to use it was powerful. The remotest spot under his rule was Grimsey, an island lying across the Arctic circle, thirty-five miles from the mainland. It was small, it was sparsely populated. its inhabitants were fishermen with no boats but i open row boats, it had no trade no vessels touched at it, and the sea that separated it from Iceland was frozen during many months of the year. And to this island Jorgen Jorgenson decided that Michael Sunlocks should go When the word was brought to Michael Sunlocks, he asked what he was expected to do on that little rock at the end of the world, and said for life," he said, "but if I must live, let me them. At that she remembered that it was not of an old curmadgeon like himself could see that Grimsey would be his sentence of death. live here. I am blind, I do not know the darkness of this place, and all Lask of you is air and Old Adam, too, protested loudly, whereupon Jorgen Jorgensen unswered with a smile that he had supposed that all be intended to do was for the benefit of the prisoner himself, who would surely prefer a whole island to live upon to being confined in a cell at Rogis javik, "He will there have liberty to move about," said Jorgen, " and he will live under the protection of the Daniel laws,"

"Then that will be more than he has done here," said Adam, boldly, "where he has existed at the caprice of a Danish tyrant." The people of Roykjavik heard of the banishment with surprise and anger, but nothing availed to prevent it. When the appointed day come. Michael Sunlooks was marched out of his how long? desert between a line of guards. There was a quite restrain herself, and though she dare not great throng to bid adieu to him and to grown at speak, she sang. It was on the Sunday after ugain, and her dark eyes danced, and all her the power that sent him. His face was pale, but his bodily strength was good. His step was firm and steady, and gave hardly a hint of his blindness. His farewell of those who crowded moon him was simple and manly. "Good bye," he said, "and though with my eyes I cannot see you, I can see you with my heart, and that is the better eight whereof death alone can rob me. No doubt you have much to forgive to me; so forgive it to me now, for we shall meat no more.

There was many a sob at that word, but the two who would have been most touched by it were not there to hear it, for Greebs and old Adam were busy with their own enterprise, as we shall learn hereafter.

When Michael Sunlocks was landed at Grimsey, he was put in charge of the priest of the island. The priest was to take him into his house, to feed, clothe and attend to him, and report his condition twice a year to the Governor at Reykjavik. For such service to the State, the good man was to receive an annual Michael Sanlocks the last ten days' journey sure," she thought, but she could not; and the and now that she steed face to face with him, withstipend of a thousand kromer, and all arrange-

Michael Saulocks was then on the edge of the habitable world. There was no attempt to confine him, but his home was an island bound by a rooky coast: he was blind and, therefore, helpless; and he could not step out a thousand yards alone without the danger of walking over a log a great deal, and not to be withheld by any brave show of liberty, he was as much in fetters. Not long afterwards she heard Michael Sunlocks ask the priest if he had never thought of marriage. And the priest answered yes, that he was to have married at Reykjavik about the time he was sent to Grimsey, but the lady had looked shy at his banish.

All Grimsey shared both, beautiful and delicate complexion. all his little body smelling sweet with the soft not help it—that Sunlocks listened for the sound for the fisher-folk had grown to like the pale of her own footstep whenever by chance (which night have been rare) she passed his way.

And at first this was a cause of fear to her might even do so, and save her against her will Sunlocks himself took the blow with composure, to reveal herself; and then of hope that he from the sickening pains of hungry waiting; saying it was plainly his destiny and of a piece and finally of horror that perhaps after all he was thinking of her as snother woman. This last thought sent all the blood of her body tingling into her face, and on the day it flashed upon her, do what she would she could not but hate him for it as for an infidenty that might not be

"He never speaks of me," she thought, "never thinks of me; I am dead to him; quite, quite dead, and swept out of his mind It was a cruel conflict of love and hate, and if the more keen. Thus she found a way to ment it had come to a man he would have said within all his wishes, and before he had asked he was himself, " By this token I know that she whom answered. If the day was cold he found gloves I love has forgotten me, and may be happy with to his hand; if he thought to wash there was enother some day. Well I am nothing let me water beside him; if he wished to write the pen go my ways." But that is not the gospel of a lay near his fingers. Meantime he never heard | woman's love, with all its sweet, delicious selmore than a light footfall and the rustle of a fishness. And her busband was an Icelander, and he i "Yes," said the priest, "and she's like myself " And what is that P" said Sunlocks.

"That she has never been able to look at any never to share it, was to sit at a feast and eat body else," said the pricet. "And that's wh "Oh." said Sunlocks, in the low marmur of the blind, "if God had but given me this woman.

"Gracious heavens!" thought Greebs, " he is falling in love with me." At that, the hot-flush overspread her cheeks and then a subtle fancy, a daring scheme, a wi d adventure broke on her heart and head, and made every nerve in her body quiver. would let him go on: he should think she was the other woman; she would draw him ou to love her, and one day when she held him fast and sure and he was her's, her's, her's only for ever and ever, she would open her arms and cry. Sunlocks, Sunlocks, I am Greebs!" It was while she was in the first hot flush this wild thought, never doubting but the frantic thing was possible, for leve knows no impediments, that the apotheoury came from Husevik, saying he was sent by some unknown correspondent named Adam Fairbrother, who had written first from Consulacen and next from London. He examined the eyes of Michael Sunlooks, by the daylight first, but the sesson being the winter season, and the daylight heavy with fog from off the sea; he asked for a candle and Greebs was called to hold it while he examined the syes again Never before had she been near to her husband throughout the two years that she had lived under the same roof with him. over the desert, set their faces back towards the more closely for the chance that had so nearly in sound of his very breathing, with nothing between them but the thin grey film that lay over his dear eyes, she could not persuade horself but that he was looking at her and seeing

In the message of the Governor she saw death, instant death, death without word or warning, and every hour of herlife thereafter was beset with terrors. It was the month of February, and if the snow fell from the mossy eaves in heavy thads, she thought it was the muffled tread of the guards who were to come for her husband; and if the ice-floes that swept down from Greenland cracked on the coast of Grimsey, she heard the shot that was to end his life. When Sunlocks talked of destiny she could walk out by the priest's arm, or lie by the other woman's in all the wide world. Then she cried, and when the priest railed at Jorgen Jor-Law within sound of a stream, and the winter thought, " How foolish! " He will never see his boy," she thought, hever never never now. Yet she could hardly believe it true that the rnel chance could befall him. What good could the death of Sunlocks do to anyone? What evil did be bring to any creature that he was alive on that rock at the farthest ends of the earth and sea? Blind, too, and helpless, degraded from his high place, his young life wrecked, and his noble gifts wa-ted! There must have been some mistake. She would go out to the ship and ask if it was not so.
